Difference Between Language and Communication

The key difference between language and communication is that language is a mode of communication. In other words, language is a medium used in transforming the message from one to other. The two words, language and communication, have clear distinctions in their meanings and connotations. Language represents words whether it is writing or speaking.

Moreover, verbal communication (the words used) is only one part of the larger communication process that includes body language, facial expression, tone of voice, and voice volume.

The Psychology of Verbal Communication

The Psychology of Verbal Communication 2 2 Although linguists think about language as an abstract structure-- a set of principles that specify the relations between a sequence of sounds and a sequence of meanings--to its users, what is most significant about language is its versatility as a medium for communication.
